BIEN VENIDO! Many people are aware that Mexican cooking is a blend of ancient Indian traditions and "new" methods & spices brought over by the Spanish Conquistadors in 1519 but few realize the islands of the Caribbean were the first stops by these European travelers as early as 1492 when Christopher Columbus first landed on the isle of Hispanola. What this means is that while both cuisines developed separately they share a common heritage and blend together well. So while some of our specialties may be distinctly Mexican and others definitely Caribbean often it is difficult to categorize. Our goal has always been to serve you the best of these foods we can, and that means spending the extra time and money to insure our chefs have the best ingredients available. It also means preparing each dinner to order when its ordered and not before which means you may have to wait just a little longer than some places you've been, but we think you'll find this extra effort worth any small delay. So please sit back, relax, enjoy a cerveza (beer), Margarita, or the islands own special thirst quenchers, and maybe watch your meal being prepared with the greatest care possible. Muchas Gracias!
